

What to do if you are cancelled

At Omnicorp, we are understanding that individuals would have done past actions not followed within the guidelines for the company. Staff may have disgracefully left rubbish in public property instead of placing the unwanted belongings in a designated area; or staff may have said words to a colleague which came across distasteful and may have upset third party bodies from the intent of the description.

The appropriate response for these cases would be to deny everything. Any evidence of agreement is enough to escalate a situation, thus if one refuses the evidence then it is dismayed and cannot be truthful. We will ensure that all data of a significant case that could affect the company will be extradited with the Secondary Body Data Management Team which deals with these affairs and other reports of data being leaked to a non-internal source.

If the information of what a staff did which may be deemed inappropriate is shared locally within Omnicorp, then under employment terms and conditions we are allowed to perform a native operation with no extra cost to individuals salaries. The surgery will provide an easy method to dismantle all possible consequences of an individuals' actions.
