Transcript of Stock investor meeting

Prue: Alright, let's get started. Stock performance for Q1—

Derek: (interrupting) Can we address the real issue? Why does this company do...everything? Like, last week, I saw an ad for OmniCorp branded cereal, but you also make missile guidance systems?

Lenny: We believe in diversification.

Derek: You believe in confusing the hell out of me.

Prue: If we could please focus, Q1 reports show—

Derek: (slamming table) And what's this about a Picasso in the archives? I invested thinking we were making self-driving cars. Not hoarding paintings!

Lenny: Picasso's not a painting. He's the head of archives.

Derek: I KNEW IT! You're cloning artists. I demand answers.

Prue: Sigh. Picasso is a very capable historian for the company. And no, we are not in the business of human cloning. Yet.

Lenny: (muttering) Give it a few quarters.

Derek: That's exactly what a cloning company would say.

Prue: (pinching bridge of nose) Anyway, back to stock performance—

Derek: Ah yes, my money. How's my money?

Lenny: Well, our tech division is up 12%, aerospace is stabilizing, but agriculture is underperforming due to the...incident.

Derek: Ah yes. The cows.

Prue: We do not talk about the cows.

Derek: I'm just saying, if you genetically modify a dairy cow to have thumbs, you should expect consequences.

Lenny: Moving on. Public sentiment is still strong after the hyperloop launch, and our consumer goods division is thriving. We expect stock prices to rise by—

Derek: (shuffling through notes) Hold on. What's this "Emergency Revenue Plan" line item?

Prue: Oh, that's if we need a quick liquidity boost. We just, uh...release a new energy drink.

Derek: OmniCorp Liquid Lightning: Taste the Future.

Lenny: Last time we made it, it was banned in three countries.

Derek: Proudly Yeah. I still got a case.

Prue: The point is, we have contingencies in place. Now, if there are no further interruptions—

Derek: (pouring a suspiciously large drink) I have one more question. Is it true you guys are working on an AI that can predict the stock market?

Lenny: I can neither confirm nor deny that OmniCorp is developing a quantum-backed financial forecasting system with 97% accuracy.

Derek: ...So I should buy more shares?

Prue: I mean, I legally cannot tell you that. But also, yes.

Derek: You people terrify me. Here's another ten million.

Prue: Meeting adjourned.
